Excerpt from Europe From May to December The object in writing these letters was not for publication. Wanting to have a journal of the things we would do, and the things we would see, and our impressions of them, and wanting to keep our relatives and friends advised of our itinerary and doings, this form of numbered letters was adopted. The purpose was served, in that the journal is complete and truthful, and the letters, having been passed from house to house, and from friend to friend, afforded several of them the possibility of mentally following in our route. The proposed distribution of some printed copies is to supply a popular demand which does not exist. For the very essential aid which was received, and without which the object could not have been accomplished, thanks are due to the very efficient International Postal Service, for promptly delivering each of the fifty semi-weekly letters, as addressed, and not least, by any means, to the dear relative who, with untiring care, followed them during their many changes, and finally placed the complete package in our hands. Many of those who will glance into the volume are qualified to point out its literary demerits, and the failure as a journal. To save them the trouble of criticism, we ask them to remember that they are reading Unpublished Private Letters. If by any chance the story falls under the observation of literary critics, to them the writer says, "Oh! I have already rejected the thing;" hence, if they should become interested, to them would fall the burden of proof. To all the writer offers these truisms. Personal freedom reigns. You are not compelled to read any of the book, and if it should fall into your possession, you may place it among other dummies in some imaginary library.
